

TOBY
MULLIGAN

“THE NUDE DOES NOT SIMPLY REPRESENT THE BODY, BUT RELATES IT, BY ANALOGY, TO ALL STRUCTURES THAT HAVE BECOME PART OF OUR IMAGINATIVE EXPERIENCE.”

From, The Nude: A Study in Ideal Form, Kenneth Clark (1956)

Toby Mulligan’s personal and artistic mission is to connect with the world around him on a profound level, then to convey what he has learned and understood through his painting. This thirst for engagement means his work ranges across subjects and ideas. He is particularly drawn to painting figures, especially nudes, as they offer the authenticity of humanity stripped bare.

Over the last decade Toby has become a major force in British contemporary art. This has been reflected not only in the success of his artwork in galleries but in a range of accolades and achievements.

A painting of his daughter is an outstanding example of his portraiture and was selected for the BP Portrait Award 2012. Entitled

‘About Time’, it was hung in the National Portrait Gallery in London throughout the summer and then exhibited at the National Portrait Gallery in Edinburgh. It is now hanging in Clarendon Fine Art.

He has also made a number of films painting portraits for companies including Winsor and Newton, and has been filmed painting for Sky Arts. He was commissioned to paint tennis star Roger Federer in 2014 for the player’s annual charity gala in Geneva, and his work is in private collections around the world, including in Mick Jagger’s chateau in France.

Mulligan works in a variety of media including charcoal on paper and inks. He is deeply engaged with the physical creative process so often grinds his own pigments and has been known to experiment with varnishes, wax, medieval paint recipes and rolls of wallpaper.

His spontaneous style has developed over many years. When he begins a piece, he does not prepare with sketches or planning, but simply starts to paint or draw, and each work is intuitive, spirited and extraordinary. He uses a wide range of models, but feels that his best work comes from making a connection with the person he paints. Although he does use photographs, his preference is always to paint from life and to form this connection with the model.

His mantra both as an artist and as a person is to simply to be present, paying total attention to the world within and without. He believes we can go out and learn whatever we need, thanks to the information revolution, so there's no need to go around with a head full of facts and figures. The challenge as he sees it is to be free, clear and "as unfettered and unthinking as the day we were born. Always open, always amazed".
