

ILANA
GAL

Expressive figurative explorations of line and colour

At first glance, Ilana Gal's lively and colourful paintings have a deceptive naivete. On closer examination, the strangely piercing expressions of the characters and the intriguing composition imbue them with an unexpected emotional impact. This results in a strong sense of meaningful engagement between the viewer and the painting.

The characters who seem so central to Ilana's powerful and expressive works are only part of the story. She says: "The lines and the colours aren't the means to an end but are the end in itself...I am looking for the harmony and composition between lines and colours, that's my playground, my working material, my language..."

Ilana's work never begins with the visualisation of an idea or statement; rather they grow in an organic process that leaves room for random and unexpected occurrences. "Whenever I approach a new canvas", she says, "I begin with unguided strokes and allow the composition to simply emerge." She believes that although an artist may attribute their own meaning to a work it should be left to the viewer to interpret it through their own subjective and individual experience.

Ilana has now been painting for two decades and her work has been the subject of numerous successful exhibitions all over the world.
